Emerson, A.

Teaching media in the primary school.

Cassell, New York, NY (ISBN 0-304-32435-3). 139 p. (1993).

Media education has a unique and vital part to play in education and is particularly important in the primary school, since the media now convey a vast amount of the information with which children make sense of the world. In this book for all primary teachers and advisers, the author communicates the joy of media education - how to use a camera, how to respond to the newspapers and television. He looks at the issues, theories and debates about media education and provides practical and accessible ideas for primary teachers on making use of different kinds of media in the classroom.
