
Investigates the effects of problem re-wording, language format, students’ grade level, and academic achievement on understanding and solving word problems among Filipino-English bilingual students. Reveals that better understanding and solution performance occurred when problems were (1) re-worded, (2) in the students’ first language, and (3) for students in higher levels of schooling and academic achievement. (ERIC)

Classification: C52

Keywords: comprehension; language instruction; language proficiency doi:10.1080/0144341990190203