Summary: In the lively and inanimate nature, the features of three-dimensional objects are often derived from their cuts and projections in subspace of lower dimension. For this, the not very well-known interdisciplinary science stereology is used. The paper deals with its brief characteristics, basic stereological relations, historical development and specific tasks.

Classification: G90 M50 M60
Keywords: stereology